Tesco scores £77m bid for Metro There has been a swift counterbid by Metro -- the parent company of Asda, Sainsbury's and Marks & Spencer -- for the controversial Tesco redevelopment of Bristol Central Station. The property company, which has been looking for a large headquarters since its acquittal last year of a £20m fraud charge, launched a £77m bid for the site on Thursday morning. Metro has long been on the lookout for a property that would make a relatively large capital gain to sweeten the deal, and it has now emerged the Bristol development is being floated as a possible acquisition. It is understood Metro's most recent offer has been pegged at an average price of £1.2m per square metre, representing an average cash cost of £91.7m and a total purchase price of £101m. Tesco declined to comment on the developments, but has been informed of the Metro bid and the seller, Bristol City Council, was asked to confirm that the sale is not compulsory. Bristol City Council said that, subject to confirmation that the bid has been accepted, it is not required to sell the property at this time. Tenders for the site were originally due to close on March 10, but are now expected to be re-opened until the week beginning March 17. Metro's bid comes just days after its fellow blue-chip housebuilder, Taylor Wimpey, agreed to sell its UK headquarters on the Broad Quarter in Bristol for £21.6m. Metro is also understood to have lodged an application with the Scottish Property Valuation Office to undertake the valuation of its site at 17-19 Station Road. The company recently acquired a portfolio of properties in the Lennox Industrial Estate near Balloch in Stirlingshire and is looking to carry out work on the site to maximise its potential profit. Last month, Metro completed the purchase of the 3,475sqm Tennants Yard development at Sunderland from government-owned property developers Facima, subject to a number of conditions being satisfied, including securing planning consent. Metro has now completed two of the 24 retail-led apartment projects it has in the pipeline, the first of which has been criticised for having too few apartments and too few parking spaces. It will shortly start work on a third project that will provide a new 6,500sqm shopping centre across its business park next to the new St

Anterior mediastinal tumors. The most common mediastinal tumors are thymomas and cysts. They are found most commonly in the anterior mediastinum, but also in the posterior mediastinum, prevertebral, and retroperitoneum. They have variable appearances, ranging from single thin-walled cysts with a smooth outer wall to tumors measuring more than 10 cm in diameter that encase the vessels of the thoracic aorta. The diagnosis of mediastinal tumors is based on a history, physical examination, and an x-ray film of the chest. At the stage of diagnosis, pulmonary function tests are often helpful because of the presence of lung parenchymal compromise. For staging of tumors, computed tomography is the best imaging modality. In this review, we will focus on the surgical approach to anterior mediastinal tumors. Classic prints of early 4th century schoolmen adhering to Photius' teaching and in opposition to the Slavs suggest that the method used is a pictorial rendering of the subject (thus, subordinate to one's eyes and senses) on a papyrus or wooden panel, rather than in prose of which we have no surviving example. The work of these late 4th and early 5th-century Christian writers was often done in this manner and an example survives, in a copy of the Hexapla (a Greek translation of the Bible, with an abridgement of Aristotle's logic), written in Greek (in the Codex Laurentianus). This method is described by two late 4th-century Christian writers as "reading pictures," that is, as a method of concentrating on the figures or text while allowing one's eyes to wander over the landscape. The image in question seems to be Alexander Paulus' Anastasis III (a piece of Byzantine iconography), which depicts the city of Constantinople at sunrise, built on the ruins of the ancient Greek capital, and still occasionally frequented by early Christian pilgrims. The earliest known representation of the method is in the black and white, 55 x 52 cm, Head of John Lydus, a head of John Lydus of Milan, painted by Gaspard Dughet in Milan (1655). Lydus was known as "The Philosopher", in Latin "Philosophus", and thus this work was certainly not intended as a teaching aid. This painting is now in the Church of San Sebastiano in Milan. (i)
